

From the Editors

Journals such as The Victorian Naturalist are continually dependant, in the first instance, on researchers and writers who submit material for publication. In the scheme of things it is their names that appear at the beginning of an issue, in the list of contents. But in every case there are many other people whose names do not appear, but who have been involved in some capacity in bringing the papers to publication. The present issue is a case in point. Although it is only the editors and authors who are named on the opposite page, in fact there were almost twice as many individuals who played some part in getting this issue into print. As well as the editors and their assistant, there are referees, proofreaders, and printers. Further individuals volunteer their time to enable other aspects of the overall production to occur – Ken Bell annually produces an index to each volume; Dorothy Mahler sends out the complimentary copies to authors after the printing of each issue. Ultimately the published work of authors rests on the input of all of these people; they are essential to the continued successful functioning of the journal.
